It's a universal narrative, a reflection of our collective journey as a society, and it finds its gripping voice in the pages of "They Will Stop at Nothing" by Samantha Bailey Smith.

A Lifelong Passion for Mystery Writing

Samantha Bailey Smith's fascination with mystery writing began at a remarkably young age. As a five-year-old bookworm, she embarked on her literary voyage, reading Agatha Christie's works. By high school, she had finished the enigmatic tales of Ellery Queen. Fueled by an unwavering determination, Samantha ventured into writing, driven by a dream to see her own name grace the cover of a mystery novel.

They Will Stop at Nothing thrusts readers into the world of an international conglomerate's quest for power and riches in the idyllic Hawaiian Islands. In this enthralling narrative, two resilient women emerge as the last line of defense, fiercely guarding the land and culture of the Hawaiian people.

The Spark of Inspiration

Inspiration often strikes in the most unexpected moments. For Samantha, it was a tranquil day in the Sandia Mountains of Albuquerque, gazing upon a hot air balloon mass ascension. As the vibrant balloons floated gracefully against the vivid blue sky, an idea sparked in her mind.

"Could a murder involving victims being pushed from a hot air balloon in Albuquerque be the prompt for a gripping tale of land disputes in the Hawaiian Islands?"
